Vapaata aikaa, mahdollisuus ruokailuun omalla kustannuksella vapaavalintaisessa paikassa.

Klo 13:30–16:30: Bastionien käytävät (Tallinnan linnoittamisen museo) Kiek in de Kōk ja kävely Toompean mäelle

Kiek in de Kōk (osoite Komandandi tee 2) on noin 10 minuutin kävelymatkan päässä hotellista. Kierros tehdään 2 pienemmässä ryhmässä (max 20 + 20 henkeä). Klo 13.30 Kiek in de Kōk lipunmyynnin luota:

1. ryhmä menee museon oppaan (opastus suomeksi) kanssa käytäviin ja

2. ryhmä tutustuu torniin ryhmän oman oppaan johdolla. Klo 14.30 ryhmät vaihtavat. Hintaan sisältyy myös sisäänkäynti The carved stone -museoon.

Huom. Bastionien käytävät - lämpötila ympäri vuoden 10–12 astetta eli vaatetus sen mukaan.

Sen jälkeen (noin klo 15:40) oppaamme kanssa kävelykierros Toompealla, joka päättyy Toompealla tai Raatihuoneentorilla ryhmän toivomuksen mukaan.

Klo 19:00: Illallinen ravintolassa Balthasar (kynsilaukka ravintola Raatihuoneentorilla)

Description: In 1999, the first garlic restaurant, called Balthasar was opened on the Town Hall Square in the center of old Tallinn. Because of its unique menu and interior the Balthasar soon gained popularity. The wooden interior that is fit to medieval buildings and very successful restoration give a sense of aristocratic aura. The windows open beautiful view to the Town Hall. The main component in the menu is garlic. You can choose between different tastes of garlic beginning with appetizers up to desserts.

The restaurant was named after a notorious writer and chronicler, Balthasar Russow, who wrote his masterpiece "Chronicle of Livonia", while residing in these very rooms. The Chronicle of Livonia describes the life 'of' and 'in' Estonia between the 12-th and 16-th century. The building of Town-Hall Apothecary, which was first mentioned in 1422 is unique, because the apothecary opened here during the 15-th century is still in business today making it the oldest pharmacy in Europe.

Kierroksen alku Raatihuoneen edestä.

Holy Ghost Church (Church)

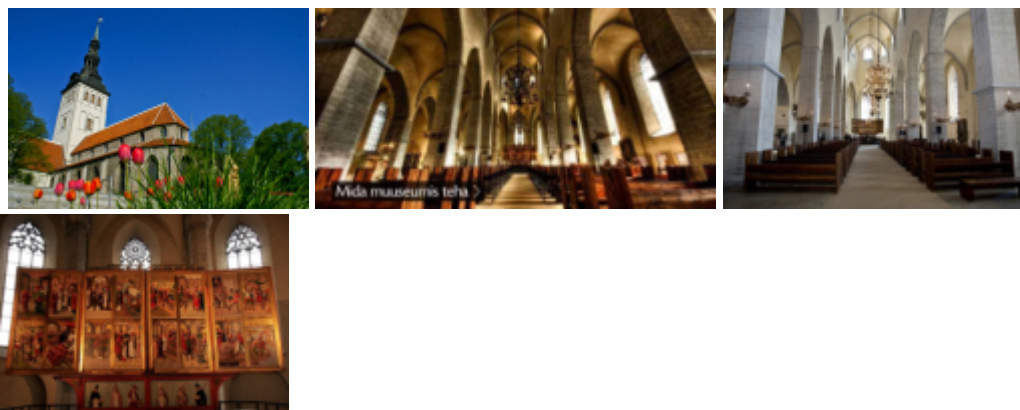

Description: Church of Holy Ghost is the only sacred building from the 14th century in Tallinn that has preserved its original form. The simple, humble Church of the Holy Ghost was completed in the 1360's and, but for the exception of the baroque spire, it has retained its original medieval exterior. The Church of the Holy Ghost holds an important place in Estonian cultural history: the first Estonian sermons were preached here, and the Livonian chronicler Balthasar Russow worked here as a teacher in the late 16th century.

The interior is richly decorated, a good example of wooden sculpture from the Gothic era. The altar, commissioned from Berndt Notke in 1483, is one of the four most precious Medieval works of art in Estonia.

St Nicholas Church (Niguliste Church) (Church)

Description: St. Nicholas was the only church in Tallinn's downtown which remained untouched by the destruction of icons brought by the Lutheran Reformation in 1523: the clever head of the congregation poured molten lead into the locks of the church, and the raging hordes could not get in.

The church was seriously damaged, however, in the bombing raids of 1944. After its renovation, the church suffered a fire in 1982, but today it has once again been restored.

The rare main altar in St. Nicholas shows paintings depicting the life of St. Nicholas, and was commissioned from the Lübeck master Herman Rode in 1482.

The late 15th-century Maria altar, which once belonged to Tallinn's Brotherhood of Blackheads, was commissioned from Bruges. The artist is generally considered to be the anonymous artist responsible for the Lucia legend, though the altar has also been associated with the workshop of Hans Memling, the leading artist in Bruges of that time.

Located in St. Anthony's chapel is the preserved beginning section of the extensive Dance Macabre, painted by one of the great figures of Northern Europe in the late Middle Ages, Berndt Notke of Lübeck (late 15th century).

Anthony's 16th-century altar retable have been preserved in the church. In the silver chamber, silverwork from the collections of guilds, the Brotherhood of Blackheads, and churches is on display. Excellent acoustics make the church a favourite concert hall.
